

The ideal state of school through juvenile cases

- Focusing on the Kobe child murders -

KOBAYASHI Yuki

Graduate School of Science for Human Services, Ritsumeikan University

Key words: juvenile cases, school system, cooperation

There are various factors of juvenile cases. Above all, this research focuses on school because youths spend a lot of time there. Utilizing books about the Kobe child murders, this research examines methods that schools should do to prevent juvenile crime. The results show that the present school system would have been effective in the school when the incident happened. For example, the present school system has school counsellors and school social workers. Maybe this incident did not happen. But developing only the school system is meaningless. This study concludes that schools should cooperate with specialized agencies to conjugate this system.