

Listen to a Man Released from Prison : In Accordance with Support for the Repeat offenders with Disabilities

Chikako Maesaka

Graduate School of Science for Human Services, Ritsumeikan University

Key words: repeat offenders with disabilities, drift, anchor, witness, free society

Abstract

The purpose of this study is to reveal what a repeat offender with disabilities told about his life including crimes and sentenced life.

Data are based on the researchers listening and recording his life story before release and as ethnographer after release. Therefore this study is a combination of life-story research and ethnography research.

I find that his life is an anchor in the life worth to live drifting as blowing in the wind. He finds out his own anchor for a good life.

This study concludes how we met between prison and this world, justice and human service, the past and future, and making his new story. I serve as witness that he has not committed another crime now, and is a citizen of free society.