

Relationships With Others

– Mainly regarding Martin Buber’s I and You –

TANIGUCHI Nanae

Graduate School of Science for Human Services, Ritsumeikan University

Keywords: Dialogue, relationships, encounters

Abstract

In this study, I discuss relationships with others. The study is set on the basis of Martin Buber’s I and You. The first chapter focuses on the life of Martin Buber, and it can cause one to think of notions of “I/it” and “I/you” in “I and you.” In the second chapter, I thought about the notion of “I/you.” This notion refers to relations between people and other people or things. However, in this chapter, the notion is limited for the cases in which people relate with other people. In the third chapter, relationships between people and various things are discussed; for example, nature, culture, society, and religious matters. Relationships with others are difficult, but we can treat each encounter as important. Then, we can come to trust the meaning of life.