

AY2024 Application Guidelines for Ritsumeikan University Early-career Researcher Development Program

1. Purport of the Early-career Researcher Development Program

Developing early-career researchers is an important issue in building a next-generation research university with the Ritsumeikan Knowledge Nodes concept at its core, as set forth in the R2030 Academy Vision. In the Fourth Ritsumeikan University Mid-term Plan for Research Advancement, the basic goal is “to realize a next-generation research university that generates new social symbiotic values and emergent human resources,” and one of the University’s visions is to enhance individual research capabilities by providing support for early-career researchers and other researchers according to their career stage as well as by providing basic research support. As such, this program will be implemented to nurture early-career researchers who are expected to be active in domestic or overseas education/research institutions or companies (as research workers). It aims to help early-career researchers who have obtained their degrees at the University cultivate their research capabilities within the network of researchers at the University’s research centers, etc., and to facilitate the acquisition of their subsequent career posts. The program also attempts to nurture human resources who will become core researchers at the University in the future, and who will be able to play an active role while involving other researchers.

The research focus is not confined to specific fields, but covers all fields from Humanities and Social Sciences to Natural Sciences. We offer recruitment for all levels, from basic research to applied research.

For this year’s program, we would welcome the active participation of female researchers, based on the policy of enhancing research capabilities through the promotion of gender equality and the establishment of a diverse environment at the University.
